

Great Golden Retriever Puppy Training.

Golden Retrievers are great family dogs. They are friendly and great with kids. They are usually easy to train because they are very loyal and want to please their owners. Just like having a new baby, you have to teach them the place to use the bathroom and how to behave in at home.

It is good if you take the first few days that the puppy is at your home and spend the entire day with it. Spend some time walking it around the neighborhood. This will teach the puppy to walk with you.

If you do not want the dog to be on the furniture then you should allow it to run freely around the house. When you see that it is trying to get up on the furniture then you should immediately gently push it down to the floor and tell it "no". After doing this several times the puppy will stop trying to get up on the furniture.

Positive reinforcement is a great way to teach your new Golden Retriever puppy to behave in the way that you want it to. Keep some treats at hand so that when it being good or when it learns a new trick you can give it positive rewards for its positive behavior. Your puppy needs your guidance so be sure to show it love and appreciation when it is being good and show it that you are not pleased when it makes mistakes. The puppy will make mistakes but keep working at the training and you will find that your new dog is a great addition to your family.
